大学院教育イニシアティブセンター

2014 2/21(金) 12:40 – 13:20

会場：ラーニング・コモンズ 「J-BEANS」

We present some efforts undertaken by the Centre for Graduate Education Initiative, at JAIST, towards embracing and shaping cultural changes in graduate education. This includes development and enhancement of transferable skills. These are skills that are central to occupational competence in all sectors and at all levels (Department for Education and Employment DfEE, UK, 1997), and include project management, leadership, communication, working in teams and problem solving.

Most of the initiatives to be discussed are through the effort of an interdisciplinary group comprising faculty members and doctoral students which although established only 11 months ago has proven very successful in engaging students to actively take on challenges, some responsibility and ownership of their education. Such activities are vital for enriching the students' learning experience as well as in equipping them with the right tools towards becoming productive global citizens. The talk will be introduced by Mun'de Vestergaard, followed by some of students from the Transferable Skills Project who will share their experiences a vital part of what the project is about: the student voice, experience, ownership and responsibility.

The talk will be given in English.
